16 DAYS ACTIVISM AGAINST GENDER BASED VIOLENCE

EDITORIAL:

The UN Secretary-General’s UNITE by 2030 to End Violence against Women campaign is marking the 16 Days of Activism against Gender-based Violence (25 November to 10 December 2020) under the global theme, “Orange the World: Fund, Respond, Prevent, Collect”.

As many countries implemented lockdown measures to stop the spread of the coronavirus, violence against women, especially domestic violence, intensified, and in some countries, calls to helplines have increased five-fold. In others situations, formal reports of domestic violence have decreased as survivors found it harder to seek help and access support through the regular channels. School closures and economic strains left women and girls poorer, out of school and out of jobs, and more vulnerable to exploitation, abuse, forced marriage, and harassment.

In April 2020, as the pandemic spread across the world, the UN Secretary-General called for “peace at home”, and 146 Members States responded with their strong statement of commitment. In recent months 135 countries have strengthened actions and resources to address violence against women as part of the response to COVID-19 Pandemic. Yet, much more is needed.

In order to observe the 16 Days of Activism against Gender Based Violence, LWSIT organized several programs across its various projects as briefly mentioned here:
